1 Defendant Cornell University (“Cornell”) hereby submits its memorandum of 2 points and authorities in support of Cornell’s special motion to strike the Complaint 3 of plaintiff Kevin Vanginderen (“Plaintiff”) in its entirety, with prejudice and 4 without leave to amend.

5 INTRODUCTION

6 This action presents a direct First Amendment challenge to the manner in 7 which universities in particular, and libraries in general, can maintain their historic 8 function as preservers of expressed ideas and information. Recently, universities, 9 libraries and other institutions have endeavored to increase public knowledge by 10 digitizing their physical archives and making them available electronically. Doing 11 so cannot be a republication that restarts applicable statutes of limitations based on 12 the content of those works.

13 Were this Court to find that digitization constitutes republication for 14 defamation or false light purposes, universities everywhere would be confronted 15 with the need to research and verify every assertion of fact in all works housed at 16 those institutions. These burdens are wholly inconsistent with the free expression 17 intended by the First Amendment and equally inconsistent with the historic role of 18 our universities as the retainers and imparters of ideas. Further, permitting this 19 claim to proceed is wholly inconsistent with the progression of the law concerning 20 defamation and free speech.

21 This case in particular underscores the risks to universities and libraries 22 because the claims of defamation and privacy invasion, with the $1,000,000 price 23 tag attached to them, are obviously premised on the hope that the underlying facts 24 will be unavailable because of the passage of the 24 years since the arrest and 25 conviction of the plaintiff occurred. As the concurrently filed declarations and court 26 records demonstrate, however, in this case the hope of immunity from proof of 27 plaintiff’s crimes because of lost memory is futile. The public records of the public 28

1 legal proceedings demonstrate beyond cavil that the Plaintiff, an active member of 2 the California State Bar, and of this Court, is a convicted thief, indeed convicted 3 upon his own plea of guilty in satisfaction of a pending burglary charge.

4 The evidence reveals that Plaintiff was charged on March 8, 1983 with third 5 degree burglary, arising from his theft of books from an office in Fernow Hall on 6 Cornell's campus on March 5, 1983. According to the Accusatory Instrument, this 7 charge was based on Plaintiff's sworn confession. He was arrested, and on March 8 17, 1983, the Cornell Chronicle, in its weekly police blotter column, accurately 9 reported Plaintiff's arrest in a brief one-paragraph summary. This is the alleged 10 libel and public disclosure upon which Plaintiff sues.

11 Because Plaintiff cannot possibly prevail in this action, it is imperative that 12 this Court apply the protections of California Code of Civil Procedure Section 13 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, and dismiss the action. The Ninth Circuit has 14 repeatedly recognized the power and propriety of District Courts in California 15 applying the statute where warranted. See, e.g., Zamani v. Carnes, 491 F.3d 990, 16 994 (9th Cir. 2007). This Court therefore is empowered to bring this action's direct 17 intrusion into the exercise of free speech to an end, and it should do so in a 18 published opinion that will put all on notice of the risk of bringing such spurious 19 challenges to the conscientious operation of universities and libraries in ensuring 20 access to, and expression of, ideas.

21 STATEMENT OF FACTS

22 A. Plaintiff's Criminal Activity and the Cornell Chronicle's reporting 23 of it.

24 On March 8, 1983, plaintiff Kevin G. Vanginderen ("Plaintiff") was charged 25 in Ithaca City Court with third degree burglary, a Class D felony. The Accusatory 26 Instrument alleged:

on or about the 5th day of March, 1983 . . . [Plaintiff] did knowingly enter or remain unlawfully in a building, to wit: defendant entered at approx. 2:00AM room 312C Fernow Hall, Tower Road, Cornell University, City of Ithaca, N.Y., to commit the crime of larceny therein by stealing books, with said office space belonging to Richard J. Baker, with all actio[n]s by defendant without authorization, are contrary to the provisions of the Statute in case made an provided.

(See concurrently filed Defendant's Request for Judicial Notice [Def. Req. for Jud. Not.], Ex. A, p. 5).

Plaintiff confessed to the charge under oath, as documented in the Accusatory Instrument dated March 8, 1983. (Id.)¹

On March 17, 1983, the Cornell Chronicle, Cornell University's weekly campus newspaper, reported the following:

Department of Safety Officials have charged Kevin G. Vanginderen of 603 Winston Court Apartments with third degree burglaries [sic] in connection with 10 incidents of petit larceny and five burglaries on campus over a period of a year. Safety reported recovering some $474 worth of stolen goods from him.

(Def. Req. for Jud. Not., Ex. B, p. 15). This report appeared in the normal "Blotter Barton" column, which reported on police activity and public safety issues in and around Cornell University (the Cornell Police maintain their offices in Barton Hall).

A second charge was later brought against Plaintiff for petit larceny, a Class A misdemeanor. The Accusatory Instrument dated August 17, 1983, indicates that "on or about the 5th day of March, 1983 . . . [Plaintiff] did commit the crime of petit larceny by stealing books located at room 312C, Fernow Hall, Tower Road, Cornell

¹ Further details of Plaintiff's criminal activities will be available for the Court at the hearing on this special motion. An order to show cause why the court should not unseal the records of Plaintiff's arrest is pending in the relevant Tompkins County Court in the State of New York. The return date for the Order to Show Cause is November 16, 2007. (See Def. Req. for Jud. Not., Ex. D, p. 21).

University, located within the City of Ithaca, New York.” (Def. Req. for Jud. Not., Ex. A, p. 7). On August 22, 1983, Plaintiff pled guilty to petit larceny in full satisfaction of the charges pending against him. (Def. Req. for Jud. Not., Ex. A, pp. 6, 8).

The Cornell Chronicle has been publicly available since it was published on March 17, 1983, in libraries, and for some period in an online archive maintained by the Cornell University Library.

B. Plaintiff Contacts Cornell regarding the Article’s Accessibility on the Internet

On September 3, 2007, the Cornell University Library received an e-mail from Plaintiff in which Plaintiff demanded that the library remove that portion of the digitized Cornell Chronicle article, dated March 17, 1983, that describes the original charge against him for criminal activity on the Cornell campus. (Def. Req. for Jud. Not., Ex. C, p. 19). Cornell declined Plaintiff’s demand.

C. Plaintiff Files Suit

On October 1, 2007, Plaintiff filed the present action (the “Complaint”) in San Diego Superior Court based on two causes of action: libel and public disclosure of private information. The Complaint alleges, among other things, that Cornell republished the Chronicle report “sometime in the year 2007 . . . by placing it in the public domain on the defendant’s library website for the first time, which was over twenty four years after its first more limited publication.” (Compl. ¶¶ 1, 4). Plaintiff alleges that the report was false, (id.), and that he did not discover it until he “conducted an annual ‘[G]oogle search’ of his name on the [I]nternet.” (Compl. ¶¶ 2, 5). Google® searches reveal the indexed text of the article and a link to the digitized copy stored in the Cornell University Library archive. Plaintiff clicked such a link in order to enter the library’s archive and view the article.

Plaintiff seeks $1,000,000. (Compl. ¶¶ 3, 6).

DISCUSSION

I. The Complaint Is A SLAPP Lawsuit, Therefore Plaintiff Must Demonstrate a Reasonable Probability of Succeeding in His Claims

The issue of the Cornell Chronicle Plaintiff seeks to suppress addressed a matter of public interest: Plaintiff's criminal activities on the campus of Cornell University. Plaintiff's Complaint thus indisputably arises from Cornell's exercise of free speech in connection with a matter of public interest. California Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16, the "anti-SLAPP statute," therefore applies.²

The anti-SLAPP statute was enacted in 1993 in order to address "a disturbing increase in lawsuits brought primarily to chill the valid exercise of the constitutional rights of freedom of speech and petition for the redress of grievances." The statute applies to all "litigation without merit filed to dissuade or punish the exercise of First Amendment rights of defendants." California Pro-Life Council, Inc. v. Getman, 328 F.3d 1088, 1089 (9th Cir. 2003) (quoting Lafayette Morehouse, Inc. v. Chronicle Publ'g Co., 37 Cal. App. 4th 855, 858 (1995)). The anti-SLAPP statute is to be broadly interpreted so as to protect Constitutional rights and to act as a screening mechanism by "eliminate[ing] meritless litigation at an early stage in the proceedings." Macias v. Hartwell, 55 Cal. App. 4th 669, 672 (1997); see also Cal. Code Civ. Pro. § 425.16(a) ("[T]his section shall be construed broadly.").

Defamation suits such as the one in the present case are a primary target of the anti-SLAPP statute. Fox Searchlight Pictures v. Paladino, 89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 305

² It is well settled that the anti-SLAPP statute applies to state claims brought in federal court. United States v. Lockheed Missiles & Space Co., Inc., 190 F.3d 963, 973 (9th Cir. 1999) (noting that disallowing anti-SLAPP motions in federal court would encourage forum shopping, contrary to the purposes of the Erie Doctrine); Four Navy Seals v. Associated Press, 413 F. Supp. 2d 1136, 1148 (S.D. Cal. 2005) (citing Lockheed and applying anti-SLAPP statute).

(2001); accord Wilcox v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 816 (1994), disapproved on other grounds by Equilon Enters., LLC v. Consumer Cause, Inc., 29 Cal. 4th 53 (2002).

The anti-SLAPP statute creates a procedure whereby a defendant may move to strike a complaint, or any cause of action, that arises “from any act of that [defendant] in furtherance of the [defendant]’s right of petition or free speech under the United States Constitution in connection with a public issue.” Cal. Code Civ.
 Pro § 425.16(b)(1). Such a complaint or cause of action “shall be subject to a special motion to strike, unless the court determines that the plaintiff has established that there is a probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim.” Id.

Courts evaluate an anti-SLAPP motion in two steps:

First, a defendant must make an initial prima facie showing that the plaintiff’s suit arises from an act in furtherance of the defendant’s rights of petition or free speech. Second, once the defendant has made a prima facie showing, the burden shifts to the plaintiff to demonstrate a probability of prevailing on the challenged claims.

Zamani v. Carnes, 491 F.3d 990, 994 (9th Cir. 2007) (internal quotations and citations omitted; see Taus v. Loftus, 40 Cal. 4th 683, 712 (2007)). A SLAPP lawsuit defendant satisfies the first prong of Section 425.16(b) upon demonstrating that the causes of action sought to be stricken are based upon “any act of [defendant] in furtherance of [defendant’s] right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue.” Wilcox, 27 Cal. App. 4th at 820 (quoting Cal. Code Civ. Pro. § 425.16(b)). Pursuant to Section 425.16(e), an “act in furtherance of a person’s right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue” includes, in relevant part:

. . . any written or oral statement or writing made in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest; (4) or any other conduct in furtherance of the exercise of the constitutional right of petition or the constitutional right of free speech in connection with a public issue or an issue of public interest.

The broadly-defined threshold showing is “intended to be given broad application in light of its purposes.” Seelig v. Infinity Broad. Corp., 97 Cal. App. 4th 798, 808 (2002) (citations omitted).

In order to succeed in its special motion to strike, Cornell need not demonstrate that Plaintiff intended to chill Cornell’s exercise of its free speech activities, Bosley Med. Inst., Inc. v. Kremer, 402 F.3d 672, 682 (9th Cir. 2005); Seelig v. Infinity Broad. Corp., 97 Cal. App. 4th 798, 808 (2002), or that its speech was actually chilled, Vess v. Ciba-Geigly Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1110 (9th Cir. 2003). Cornell also need not show that its activities were protected under the First Amendment as a matter of law. Fox Searchlight, 89 Cal. App. 4th at 305. Rather, “a court must generally presume the validity of the claimed constitutional right in the first step of the anti-SLAPP analysis Otherwise, the second step would become superfluous in almost every case, resulting in an improper shifting of the burdens.” Governor Gray Davis Com. v. Am. Taxpayers Alliance, 102 Cal. App. 4th 449, 458 (2002) (quoting Chavez v. Mendoza, 94 Cal. App. 4th 1083, 1089-90 (2001)).

Merely referencing the allegations of the Complaint itself satisfies Cornell’s required showing. See City of Cotati v. Cashman, 29 Cal. 4th 69, 78 (Cal. 2002) (“In the anti-SLAPP context, the critical point is whether the plaintiff’s cause of action itself was based on an act in furtherance of the defendant’s right of petition or free speech.”); Kajima Eng’g & Construction, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles, 95 Cal. App. 4th 921, 929 (2002) (holding that, in deciding an anti-SLAPP motion, a court must examine solely the activity that has been alleged in the pleading as the basis for the challenged cause of action).

The First and Second Causes of Action derive from Cornell’s publishing in 1983 a report of Plaintiff’s criminal activities in the Cornell Chronicle and maintaining the availability of that 1983 report both in hard and electronic form. Such publication undoubtedly is an act in furtherance of Cornell's right of free speech on a public issue and is within the ambit of the anti-SLAPP statute. Four Navy Seals, 413 F. Supp. 2d. at 1149 (holding, in anti-SLAPP case, that publication of article concerning potential criminal activity by military personnel was a matter of public interest); Duboff v. Playboy Enters. Int'l, Inc., No. 06-358-HA, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50717, at * 16 (D. Or. June 26, 2007) ("The writing and publishing of a magazine article is conduct in furtherance of the exercise of free speech rights under the [identical Oregon] anti-SLAPP statute."); Loftus, 40 Cal. 4th at 712-13 (holding that publishing findings in professional journal regarding child mistreatment qualified for anti-SLAPP protection); Colt v. Freedom Commc'ns, Inc., 109 Cal. App. 4th 1551, 1557 (noting that, in context of newspaper report concerning SEC complaint and legal proceedings, "Plaintiffs do not dispute that the publishing of newspaper articles [falls under the anti-SLAPP statute], nor could they in light of the First Amendment rights involved.").

For the foregoing reasons, Cornell has met its initial burden; the Complaint is a SLAPP suit. The burden shifts to Plaintiff to demonstrate that he has a reasonable probability of succeeding in his claims.

II. Plaintiff Cannot Demonstrate a Reasonable Probability of Succeeding in His Claims

The Court should dismiss this SLAPP lawsuit because Plaintiff cannot make the required showing that he has a reasonable probability of success. Plaintiff's defamation and public disclosure claims are legally insufficient because publication and disclosure occurred when the relevant issue of the newspaper was published on March 17, 1983, and the acts of the Cornell University Library in continuing to maintain public accessibility of that article, by maintaining paper and digital 1 archives, is not a republication that avoids application of the single publication rule.

 2 The claims are time-barred.

3 The defamation claim is fatally defective for the additional reason that even if 4 there were a publication by digitization of the Chronicle within the limitations 5 period, Cornell's report was fair and true. The private facts claim is deficient not 6 only because it is time-barred, but also because as a matter of state and First 7 Amendment law the continued public availability of newspapers reporting the news 8 is not actionable. Moreover, to the extent New York law applies to this action 9 Plaintiff cannot state a claim for public disclosure because New York does not 10 recognize such a tort. See Messenger ex rel. Messenger v. Gruner + Jahr Printing 11 and Pub., 94 N.Y.2d 436, 441 (2000).³ The Court is required to strike Plaintiff's 12 claims and award Cornell reasonable attorneys fees and costs. ARP Pharmacy 13 Servs., Inc. v. Gallagher Bassett Servs., Inc., 135 Cal. App. 4th 841, 854 (2006); 14 Cal. Code Civ. Pro. § 425.16(c).

15 Once a court determines that a Complaint arises from an act in furtherance of 16 protected expression, "the plaintiff must show a 'reasonable probability' of 17 prevailing in its claims for those claims to survive dismissal." Metabolife Int'l v.
 18 _____

19 ³ For purposes of this special motion to strike, the Court need not engage in a 20 conflict of laws analysis because California and New York law are substantially the 21 same in relevant respects regarding the libel claim. Brown v. Baden (In re Yagman), 22 796 F.2d 1165, 1170 (9th Cir. 1986) ("It is axiomatic that, unless there is a 23 difference between the laws of the states, a choice need not be made.") For 24 example, both states apply a one-year statute of limitations to libel. Cal. Code Civ.
 25 Pro. § 340(c); NY CLS CPLR § 215(3). The Court therefore can assess the 26 sufficiency of Plaintiff's libel claim with reference to the laws of either state.
 27 Furthermore, Plaintiff's claim is legally insufficient in California, for the reasons set 28 forth below, and simply is not recognized in New York.

Wornick, 264 F.3d 832, 840 (9th Cir. 2001); see Loftus, 40 Cal. 4th at 713 (“[I]n order to avoid dismissal of each claim under section 425.16, plaintiff bore the burden of demonstrating a probability that she would prevail on the particular claim.”) Plaintiff “must demonstrate that the complaint is legally sufficient and supported by a prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable judgment if the evidence submitted by the plaintiff is credited.” Metabolife Int’l, 264 F.3d at 840 (citation omitted); Loftus, 40 Cal. 4th at 714 (noting that claims must be stricken “if the plaintiff is unable to demonstrate both that the claim is legally sufficient and that there is sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case with respect to the claim.”). In order to be considered for this purpose, Plaintiff’s evidence must be “competent and admissible.” Macias v. Hartwell, 55 Cal. App. 4th 669, 675 (1997). He “cannot simply rely on the allegations in the complaint, but must provide the court with sufficient evidence to permit the court to determine whether there is a probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim.” The Traditional Cat Ass’n, Inc. v. Gilbreath, 118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 398 (2004) (granting anti-SLAPP motion) (internal quotations and citations omitted) (emphasis in original). The court “must also examine whether there are any constitutional or nonconstitutional defenses to the pleaded claims and, if so, whether there is evidence to negate any such defenses.” McGarry v. Univ. of San Diego, 154 Cal. App. 4th 97, 109 (2007).

A. Because There Was No Republication Plaintiff’s Claims Are Time-Barred, Having Accrued in 1983

The Cornell Chronicle report at issue was published in 1983, twenty-four years before Plaintiff filed this litigation. The act of making the archive available to individuals who have electronic access to the Cornell University Library server where it is maintained is not a republication that precludes application of California’s or New York’s single publication rule. Thus, any claim arose 24 years ago and expired one year later. The migration of the archive to the Internet does not

1 avoid application of the single publication rule any more than would moving the 2 newspaper from one Cornell library to another.

3 In California, causes of action for defamation and public disclosure are 4 extinguished after one year. Cal. Code Civ. Pro. § 340(c). Defamation claims in 5 New York also expire after one year, NY CLS CPLR § 215(3), and New York does 6 not recognize the disclosure tort. The statute of limitations begins to run upon 7 publication, and only one tort cause of action can be based upon that publication.
8 Id.; Firth v. State, 98 N.Y.2d 365, 371 (2002); Gregoire v. G.P. Putnam's Sons, 298 9 N.Y. 119 (1948). This is the single publication rule. See Oja v. United States Army 10 Corps of Eng'rs, 440 F.3d 1122, 1130 (9th Cir. 2006); Van Buskirk v. N.Y. Times 11 Co., 325 F.3d 87, 89 (2d Cir. 2003). This limitation applies “notwithstanding how 12 many copies of the publication are distributed or how many people hear or see the 13 broadcast. Any subsequent republication or rebroadcast gives rise to a new single 14 cause of action.” The Traditional Cat Ass'n, Inc., 118 Cal. App. 4th at 395; see Van 15 Buskirk, 325 F.3d at 39.

16 In Shively v. Bozanich, 31 Cal. 4th 1230 (2003), the leading California case 17 concerning the single publication rule, the California Supreme Court noted that the 18 primary purpose of the single publication rule was to prevent a chilling effect upon 19 the reporting of issues of public concern. Id. at 1244. Such concern was based on 20 the possibility at common law that a plaintiff

21 could bring an action seeking redress for libel against a 22 publisher based upon an allegedly defamatory remark 23 contained in a newspaper issued 17 years prior to the 24 plaintiff's discovery of the defamation, on the theory that the sale to the plaintiff of the long-forgotten copy of the newspaper constituted a new publication, starting anew the running of the period of limitations.

25 Id. at 1244. Motivated by the same concerns, Courts in this Circuit repeatedly have 26 held that the single publication rule applies to the Internet. See, e.g., Canatella v.
27 Van De Kamp, 486 F.3d 1128, 1133 (9th Cir. 2007); Oja v. United States Army 28

1 Corps of Eng'rs, 440 F.3d at 1128; Sundance Image Tech., Inc. v. Cone Editions
 2 Press, Ltd., No. 02 CV 2258 JM (AJB), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16356, at *17 (S.D.
 3 Cal. March 7, 2007).

4 There is no actionable libel in this case because Cornell has not published the 5 Cornell Chronicle article since March 17, 1983. To state a claim for libel, "plaintiff 6 must establish the intentional publication of a statement of fact that is false, 7 unprivileged, and has a natural tendency to injure or which causes special damage."
 8 Arikat v. JP Morgan Chase & Co., 430 F. Supp. 2d 1013, 1020 (N.D. Cal. 2006).
 9 "Publication" means "communication to a third person who understands the 10 defamatory meaning of the statement and its application to the person to whom 11 reference is made." Id. (quoting Okun v. Super. Ct., 29 Cal. 3d 442, 458 (1981)); 12 see Shivley v. Bozanich, 31 Cal. 4th 1230, 1242 (2003) (same). Libel thus requires 13 an intentional communication to a third person. Continued publication of the 14 original edition of a newspaper or book is not a republication, but rather is the first 15 publication and is squarely subject to the single publication rule. See generally 16 Traditional Cat Ass'n, 118 Cal. App. 4th at 401-04.

17 Cornell did not repeat facts from the original publication in a new edition of 18 the Cornell Chronicle after the initial publication in 1983, but merely maintained its 19 archive of the original publication, in an accessible electronic format. Making its 20 collection more accessible by digitization of its paper archives, thereby permitting 21 the public easier access to what already was available at various libraries (and in any 22 other locations where prior issues were available), does not avoid application of the 23 single publication rule. Had Plaintiff physically visited the library and discovered 24 the article he could not claim that there was a republication in 2007 merely because 25 he saw the Chronicle sitting on the shelf. The fact that a precise photographic image 26 of the original Chronicle article is now available online, in addition to on the shelf, 27 changes nothing, and does not amount to a republication.

1 As relevant cases make clear, intentional communication, in the libel context, 2 requires more than simply making a work available for an interested party to 3 retrieve. Courts considering arguments to the contrary have firmly rejected them 4 and reasserted the single publication rule's protection of free speech. In Canatella 5 v. Van De Kamp, the Ninth Circuit rejected plaintiff's claim that Defendants 6 published libelous State Bar disciplinary information when it was displayed on 7 Defendants' website in response to users' Internet search queries. The court also 8 rejected Plaintiff's argument that Defendant published the disciplinary information 9 when it moved that information from one part of the site to another:

10 [T]he California Bar's decision to [move] the allegedly 11 offensive disciplinary summary to Canatella's search page 12 did not trigger a new cause of action since a verbatim copy 13 of that summary had appeared on the exact same website 14 [for three years]. Thus, contrary to Cantanella's claims, the California Bar's posting of his disciplinary record in a different section of the same website did not give rise to a new cause of action

15 Canatella, 486 F.3d at 1135.

16 The Canatella holding precludes the present Plaintiff's claim. Just like the 17 disciplinary report in Canatella, the Internet archive version of the Chronicle is a 18 precise copy – in fact, the equivalent of a photograph – of the original. Consistent 19 with Canatella, simply “moving” an image of the physically archived copy from the 20 paper shelf to the electronic shelf does not republish it sufficiently to remove the 21 time-bar imposed by the single publication rule.

22 The New York Court of Appeals similarly has held that making information 23 retrievable on the Internet does not intrinsically constitute republication of that 24 information. In Firth v. State, the court rejected plaintiff's argument that “because 25 publications on the Internet are available only to those who seek them . . . , each hit 26 or viewing of the report should be considered a new publication that retriggers the 27 28

1 statute of limitations.” Firth, 98 N.Y.2d at 369. In rejecting this argument, the 2 court drew upon its decision in Gregoire v. G.P. Putnam’s Sons:

3 In Gregoire, we held that a publisher’s sale from stock of 4 a copy of a book containing libelous language did not 5 constitute a new publication. We explained that if the 6 multiple publication rule were applied to such a sale, the 7 [s]tatute of [l]imitation[s] would never expire so long as a 8 copy of such book remained in stock and is made by the publisher the subject of a sale or inspection by the public.
 Such a rule would thwart the purpose of the Legislature to bar completely and forever all actions which, as to the time of their commencement, overpass the limitation there prescribed upon litigation.

9 Id. (quoting Gregoire, 298 N.Y. at 125-126). A New York appellate court more 10 recently applied Gregoire to order the dismissal of a libel claim brought more than 11 one year after a book was posted on the Internet and placed on sale to the general 12 public. E.B. v. Liberation Publ’ns, Inc., 7 A.D.3d 566, 567 (App. Div., 2d Dep’t 13 2004) (holding that when plaintiff discovered that book on the Internet was 14 irrelevant in analysis of when publication occurred).

15 The reasoning of both Firth and Gregoire applies to the current action, and 16 California courts have explicitly adopted the reasoning of those decisions in the 17 context of the Internet. See, e.g., Shively, 31 Cal. 4th at 1244; The Traditional Cat 18 Ass’n, 118 Cal. App. 4th at 404. The Cornell University Library has made available 19 a copy of a 24-year-old issue of a Cornell newspaper to those who have access to the 20 Library over the Internet. Querying Cornell’s website for a copy of that back issue 21 is no different than walking up to a reference librarian and requesting it. Likewise, 22 receiving a copy of the issue in .pdf format on one’s computer is no different than 23 locating the Chronicle on microfiche or locating a print copy on the shelf.

24 If the creation of a digital archive were sufficient to restart the limitations 25 period, no library or institution making archives available could safely do so without 26 risking massive expense and liability. Universities would be chilled from archiving 27 the work of their students, professors and staff for fear that each new technological 28

1 platform on which past archives were made available would set the statute of 2 limitations to run anew. All of the policies and justifications for the single 3 publication rule apply here and preclude treating digital availability on a new 4 platform to count as a republication that restarts the statute of limitations.

5 Cornell has done nothing more than provide access to a virtual section of its 6 library. Because placing a copy of the March 17, 2003 edition of the Chronicle in 7 that virtual section is not a publication or a public disclosure, the Court should find 8 Plaintiff's claims legally insufficient and should strike them pursuant to the anti-9 SLAPP statute.

10 B. Plaintiff's Libel Claim Is Legally Insufficient because the *Chronicle 11 Report Was A Fair and True Report about Criminal Activity and 12 therefore Is Privileged

13 Try as he might, Plaintiff cannot escape the fact that he was charged with 14 felony burglary. As indicated in the records of the Ithaca City Court, filed 15 concurrently as Exhibit A to the Request for Judicial Notice, Plaintiff was formally 16 charged on March 8, 1983 with burglary in the third degree, a Class D felony. As 17 demonstrated in Exhibit B, the Chronicle reported:

18 Department of Safety Officials have charged Kevin G.
 19 Vanginderen of 603 Winston Court Apartments with third 20 degree burglary in connection with 10 incidents of petit larceny and five burglaries [sic] on campus over a period of a year. Safety reported recovering some $474 worth of stolen goods from him.

21 Though the Chronicle's account of Plaintiff's crimes was indeed entirely 22 accurate, it need not have been in order to be considered fair and true. "Under 23 California law, a newspaper report is fair and true if it captures the substance, the 24 gist, the sting of the libelous charge. The news article need not track verbatim the 25 underlying [criminal] proceeding." Crane v. Arizona Republic, 972 F.2d 1511, 1519 26 (9th Cir. 1992). A report need not be entirely accurate in order to be privileged.
 27 "Erroneous statement is inevitable in free debate, and . . . must be protected if the 28

1 freedoms of expression are to have the breathing space that they need . . . to 2 survive.” New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 271-272 (1964); Colt v.
 3 Freedom Commc’ns, Inc., 109 Cal. App. 4th 1551, 1558 (2003) (“[T]he ‘fair and 4 true report’ requirement does not limit the privilege to statements that contain no 5 errors.”). “A certain degree of flexibility/literary license is afforded reporters under 6 the privilege.” Crane, 972 F.2d at 1519 (quoting Reader’s Digest Ass’n v. Superior 7 Court, 37 Cal. 3d 244, 261 (1984).

8 In addition to being accurate, the Chronicle report was also privileged. It is 9 well settled that “[a]ccusations of criminal activity, like other statements, are not 10 actionable if the underlying facts are disclosed.” Nicosia v. De Rooy, 72 F. Supp. 2d 11 1093, 1103 (N.D. Cal. 1999) (citing In re Yagman, 796 F.2d 1165, 1174 (9th Cir.
 12 1986)); Franklin v. Dynamic Details, Inc., 116 Cal. App. 4th 375, 388 (2004) 13 (quoting Nicosia). Further, the Chronicle’s publication was privileged as a fair and 14 true report based on a charge or complaint to a public official. Cal. Code Civ. Pro.
 15 § 47(d) (“A privileged publication or broadcast is one made . . . By a fair and true 16 report in, or a communication to, a public journal . . . of a verified charge or 17 complaint made by any person to a public official, upon which complaint a warrant 18 has been issued.”)⁴

19 Plaintiff’s libel claim therefore is legally insufficient. The claim should be 20 stricken in accordance with the anti-SLAPP statute.

21 22 ⁴ In New York, “[a] civil action cannot be maintained against any person, firm, or 23 corporation, for the publication of a fair and true report of any judicial proceeding, 24 legislative proceeding or other official proceeding” N.Y. Civil Rights L. § 74 25 (McKinney 2007). A news report reflecting a judicial proceeding is not actionable 26 regardless of the ultimate disposition of the matter. Phillips v. Murchison, 252 F.
 27 Supp. 513, 522 (S.D.N.Y. 1966), aff’d in part, rev’d in part, 383 F.2d 370 (2d Cir.
 28 1967).

C. Plaintiff's Claim for Public Disclosure of Private Facts Is Legally Insufficient because Plaintiff's Crimes Were A Matter of Legitimate Public Concern

To succeed on a claim of public disclosure of private facts, under California law, Plaintiff must demonstrate “(1) public disclosure (2) of a private fact (3) which would be offensive and objectionable to the reasonable person and (4) which is not of legitimate public concern.” Loftus, 40 Cal. 4th at 717 (quoting Shulman v. Group W Prods., 18 Cal. 4th 200, 214 (1998)).⁵ Consistent with the fourth required element of the claim, newsworthiness is a complete defense, id., and is determined “with regard to [otherwise private] individuals by assessing the logical relationship or nexus, or the lack thereof, between the events or activities that brought the person into the public eye and the particular facts disclosed.” Id. at 718. As the California Court of Appeal explained in the first California case considering the invasion of privacy tort, the right of privacy “does not exist in the dissemination of news and news events.” Melvin v. Reid, 112 Cal. App. 285, 290 (1931).

Here, plaintiff's claim is barred by the California Supreme Court's recent holding in Gates v. Discovery Communication, as well as relevant Supreme Court precedents:

We conclude that an invasion of privacy claim based on allegations of harm caused by a media defendant's publication of facts obtained from public official records of a criminal proceeding is barred by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. (Cox, supra, 420 U.S. at p. 495; Oklahoma Publ'g, supra, 430 U.S. at p. 311; see also Daily Mail, supra, 443 U.S. at p. 103; The Florida Star, supra, 491 U.S. at p. 533; Bartnicki, supra, 532 U.S. at pp. 527–528.)

Gates v. Discovery Commc'ns, Inc., 34 Cal. 4th 679, 696 (2004).

⁵ As discussed above, New York law does not recognize this cause of action. See Gruner + Jahr Printing and Pub., 94 N.Y.2d 436 at 441. Sections 50 and 51 of New York's Civil Right's Law, which provide a limited statutory right of privacy, are inapplicable.

1 The Accusatory Instrument dated March 8, 1983 concerning plaintiff's arrest 2 was a public record in Ithaca City Court. Plaintiff's infractions brought him into the 3 public eye and the facts disclosed in the Chronicle relate directly – and exclusively – 4 to those events. The allegations against Plaintiff were a matter of public record and 5 the Chronicle was entitled to report on them.

6 The First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of the press protects the right to 7 report news even when it involves the affairs of otherwise private persons:

8 The guarantees for speech and press are not the preserve of 9 political expression or comment on public affairs, essential 10 as those are to healthy government. One need only pick up 11 any newspaper or magazine to comprehend the vast range 12 of published matter which exposes persons to public view, 13 both private citizens and public officials. Exposure of the self to others in varying degrees is a concomitant of life in a civilized community. The risk of this exposure is an essential incident of life in a society which places a primary value on freedom of speech and of press.

14 Time, Inc. v. Hill, 385 U.S. 374, 388 (1967), quoted in Shulman, 18 Cal. 4th at 208.
 15 The publication of information derived from public records, including information 16 concerning the criminal activities of otherwise private citizens, enjoys First 17 Amendment protection. In Cox Broad. Corp. v. Cohn, 420 U.S. 469 (1975), the 18 Supreme Court held that the press could not be prohibited from publishing the name 19 of a rape victim when that name had been provided in a public record. As the Court 20 explained:

21 The commission of crime, prosecutions resulting from it, 22 and judicial proceedings arising from the prosecutions, 23 however, are without question events of legitimate 24 concern to the public and consequently fall within the 25 responsibility of the press to report the operations of government [T]he prevailing law of invasion of 26 privacy generally recognizes that the interests in privacy 27 fade when the information involved already appears on the 28 public record.

Id. at 492, 494; see also The Florida Star v. B.J.F., 491 U.S. 524, 535-536 (1989).

1 The holdings in Gates, The Florida Star and Cox Broad. Corp. directly 2 preclude Plaintiff's claim for public disclosure of private information. His claim for 3 public disclosure of private information therefore is legally insufficient.

4 5 III. CONCLUSION

6 For the foregoing reasons, Cornell respectfully requests this Court to dismiss 7 Plaintiff's Complaint in its entirety, and that Cornell be awarded attorneys' fees and 8 costs.
